

Please review how communication towers affect birds. Companies that use the towers should finance the study. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has already developed voluntary tower siting and placement guidelines to guide companies in placing the towers, but it seems that not enough companies are following them. I recommend that FCC officials view the film "Winged Migration," recently released, to appreciate fully the challenges faced by migrating flocks. We all like our cell phone service, but this, like all other aspects of development, needs to be achieved without harming our natural world. Thank you.
